Excerpt: . . . the distribution at the beginning and at the end of the period of individual instruction. The distribution of the gain is analyzed in Table II. The fact that these were adults familiar with the class room and trained in many psychological experiments, yet made such marked response to the instruction and individual help, doubly emphasizes the importance of thoroughness and individual attention in the instructions if the records are to be entirely reliable. One of the best experimental proofs that we have showing the efficacy of individual care and instruction is found in the un Fig. 5. Distribution of 54 university students in individual tests (Table II). published experiments of Dr. H. S. Butfum, which have been summarized in the above mentioned Psychological Association report by Professor Seashore, as follows: Dr. Buffum experimented on twenty-five eighth grade pupils in a grammar school room. He first made a fifteen minute individual test of each pupil and classified them on this basis into three groups with modes at 3, 8, and 17 v. d. respectively. The object was twofold: (1) to determine the effect of practice and (2) to determine the success of the preliminary examination. For this purpose he gave them twenty forty-five-minute periods of training. The results show (1) that for no group is there any evidence of improvement with this practice, and (2) that all except two children. remained throughout the whole practice series within the group to which they had been assigned. Of these two,...
